

The Cursed Armor Decoder

What to ask HR about your work coverage

John says: Work coverage is great armor, until you change jobs. Here's how to find out if yours is cursed.

Bring this to HR, or open your benefits portal, and write down what you find. Ten minutes, and you'll know exactly what your work armor does and doesn't do.

Seven questions for HR

1. How much life insurance do I have through work (a flat amount or a multiple of salary)?

2. Can I buy more? Does that require health questions?

3. Who's listed as my beneficiary?

4. What happens to my coverage if I leave, get laid off, or retire?

5. Can I keep it or convert it? What's the deadline, and what would it cost?

6. Does my coverage change as I get older?

7. Is there coverage for my spouse or kids through the plan?

Good to know

- Work life insurance often ends, or has to be converted, when you leave a job.
- Some plans let you keep or convert coverage, often within a limited time window.
- Under IRS rules, the cost of employer-paid group term life coverage above $50,000 generally counts as taxable income to the employee.

Want help with this? Grab a seat at John's table.

calendly.com/thefinancialdm-proton/30min

The Financial DM • John, Licensed Term Life Agent

For educational purposes only. Not a quote, a recommendation, or legal or tax advice. Coverage details vary by policy and employer.